Hannibal didn't think that love was for him.

Not the romantic sort for certain. Not just because he viewed pretty much everyone as lesser then him to the point of being food and thought it impossible to make such a connection with... food; but also because, if he ever made that connection he just doesn't see how he could give up this part of himself for them. He also doesn't see how long term he could open up in every aspect of his life accept this one huge part. How can you be vulnerable with someone when he couldn't even hide what he was cooking most nights? It just didn't seem feasible in the long term. That is.. until he met Will.

The very gorgeous, very dark, and very blind young man he'd come to start dating.

Would you look at that. There really is someone for everyone.
